105 Acres - Trail Mileage 2.25

Annie Moore Land: This 90-acre conservation area located just off Annie Moore Road contains a mix of upland forest, wetlands and an old orchard. Origins of the name Annie Moore are unknown, but people with the name Moore were living on the Stow line at some point although no one in this family was called Ann or Annie. There has been speculation that a factor might be the name of the first Irish immigrant to USA through Ellis Island who was called Annie Moore. The property was donated to the town by J D Sargent, C Slade and K McLure. It's a quiet and somewhat secluded area that may be enjoyed best in the fall when water levels are low and poison ivy begins to die off. The Annie Moore Road trailhead is located on the right (East side) approximately 1000' past the sharp bend in the road. The trail follows a rock wall as it ventures into the forest. There is an optional loop trail that rejoins the main path as it descends near the old orchard. The main path crosses a wet area via a bridge and then ascends to meet a second loop trail which adds extends the walk with a short descent, then back up a short slope to meet the main trail again. The main path then reaches Bolton/Stow 1 Junction where it crosses a former unpaved and partially rock wall-lined extension of Annie Moore Road. The trail then follows the town line which also happens to be a county line and so is marked with occasional low lying stone posts which may be spied just off the walking path. The trail continues along downhill paths to Bolton Woods Way. Hikers that venture along Old Bolton Road can spot a very old natural stone marker at Old Bolton Road with "B" on one side and "S" on the other for the Bolton/Stow line.

Parking:

Annie Moore Road; 1-2 cars on the roadway shoulder next to the trailhead.

Suggested walks:

Out and back from either end, but adding variation by taking the loop trails in one direction, but not in the other.

Loop. Start at either the Annie Moore cul-de-sac or the Annie Moore Rd Trailhead, make a loop through the junction with the unpaved extension to Annie Moore Rd and then return to 1 starting point. This can be extended by an out and back to the kiosk at Bolton Woods Way.
